

Driver's license isn't a human rights issue; it's the law

Ron Branstner May 2019

The April 9 letter to the editor "Driver's licenses for all is a human rights issue" was poorly written with little substance of constitutional knowledge. This never should have been printed. Article VI of the Constitution puts into very definitive wording of what the supreme law of the land is. This is politically correct garbage.

To give permission to illegals to drive violates U.S. Code 1324 A, B and C. In fact, any politician that votes to give permission to drive should be arrested for aiding and abetting. This is truly a writer's lack of constitutional knowledge and should be outed for such childish behavior.

She overtly states U.S. citizens are the blame for illegals not having the same rights and privileges as those here legally. They came from countries that had poor living conditions and low wages. In America they have a home, schooling and health care. What an insult this writer shared with the readers. Yet we take it because we have been conditioned.
